J. David Markham is an internationally acclaimed historian and Napoleonic scholar. For over twenty years he has written and lectured about Napoleon and other historical topics. In addition to Napoleonic history, his interests include Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar and other topics of Ancient Rome, and the French Revolution. He and his wife, Barbara, live in Olympia, Washington, USA, and enjoy travel, walking, opera and other music and reading. David has taught history and other subjects at the university, college and high school levels, and has received numerous teaching awards and recognitions. Since 1996 he has served as INS Executive Vice-President and Editor-in-Chief. In that capacity,

David has produced a series of International Napoleonic Congresses in Europe, the Middle East and Asia. Since 2004 he has been President of the Napoleonic Alliance. A collector of some note, he has one of the world's finest private collections of Napoleonic snuffboxes.
